

5. The fairness of the provision for attorneys' fees; and
6. The ability of the defendant to withstand greater judgment, taking into account whether the defendant is a governmental actor or private entity.

Raulerson v. United States, 108 Fed. Cl. 675, 677 (2013). The weight assigned to each factor is within the discretion of the court, though settlement is generally favored. See id.

The class in this case initially consisted of 102 members, who owned 182 parcels of land. After an analysis of which property owners are entitled to recover, the class now consists of 76 members who own 126 parcels of land. In the proposed settlement, the government has agreed to make a cash payment of $1,997,969.19 to resolve all class members' claims. That amount consists of the following: (1) $1,329,058, the aggregate fair market value of the property allegedly taken; (2) $325,957.19 in prejudgment interest; (3) $320,634 in statutory fees; and (4) $22,320 in costs. After attorneys' fees and costs are subtracted,¹ a total of $1,429,494.18 will be distributed to the class members. See Doc. 64 (explaining proper method of calculating distribution). In exchange for this payment, the class members will dismiss their claims against the government, with prejudice.

Here, the factors strongly militate in favor of approving the settlement. First, the class members will be compensated for the fair market value of their property, as determined by an appraiser approved by both parties. See Doc. 52 at 4; Doc. 55 at 6-10. Second, class counsel has worked diligently in identifying and researching class members' claims, and has recommended settlement. See Doc. 55 at 4-5 (describing extensive legal research and review of property records). Third, after receiving a notice that was previously approved by the court, see Doc. 53 at 2, no class members have contested the settlement arrangement. In fact, plaintiffs' counsel represented that, as of the time of the fairness hearing, all 76 class members have affirmatively expressed approval. Fourth, as noted above, the appraiser considered the characteristics of each parcel at issue in calculating the fair market value. Therefore, each class member will receive a settlement amount that is calculated based on the type of property he or she owns. See Doc. 55 at 6-10 (describing the method used by the appraiser to value the property at issue). Fifth, the court has previously ruled on the proper method of calculating attorneys' fees, and held that such fees are fair. See Doc. 64. Sixth, and finally, although it may be argued that the United States could withstand a greater judgment, because the settlement is for the fair market value of the property, there is no creditable argument that it should do so in this case.

For the foregoing reasons, the settlement in this case is APPROVED, and the parties are directed to distribute the appropriate funds to each class member. Once the distribution is complete, plaintiffs' counsel is directed to file a notice of dismissal. At such time, the court will enter an order dismissing the case with prejudice.

SO ORDERED.
